Dear Friends:

I am pleased to present Enabling Devices' 2020 catalog. Containing a mix of new items and time-honored favorites, the catalog also introduces you to some of the remarkable folks — children, families, teachers and therapists— who use our products. Likewise, herein we feature Enabling Devices Chief Product Designer Bill Pedersen — the man behind many of our company's innovations — and Mid-Hudson Works, a local nonprofit that manufactures some of our products.

At Enabling Devices, we see our work as a collaborative process. Rather than creating and selling products we guess you might like, we consult with our customers — the folks who use them — to make sure we're on the right track.

On occasion, we even create products for individual customers on request. In cases such as these, our designers develop prototypes to meet their needs. Once a prototype is developed, the item is sent to the customer for testing and feedback. Based on the feedback, it's back to the drawing board for necessary adjustments, until the product works well for the customer. Sometimes prototypes created for individual customers become products that can later be made available to Enabling Devices' customers throughout the United States and internationally.

For example, on one occasion, a special education teacher came to us seeking a multisensory product that would teach her class about rain and wind. Based on her request, our developers came up with the idea for our now popular Misting Fan (#2134). Another time, the staff of an assistive technology lending library asked for a simple communication device they could lend out to patrons. That's how our One Message Communicator (#4595) was created.

The bottom line? We deeply appreciate your input and the personal relationships we have built with so many of you.

Best wishes,

JEIN ANOL

Seth Kanor, CEO

Cosmic Liquid Tiles are in constant use at Brookville Center for Children's Services - Marcus Avenue School, says Alison Hofferber, PT, DPT, Clinical Coordinator of Physical and Occupational Therapies.

"They're a fun visual that we use in therapies and in the classroom for strengthening and endurance activities, including jumping, hopping and dance." In addition, says Alison, "The tiles provide colorful visual/perceptual sensory input." Fouryear-old Nadia, a student at Marcus Avenue preschool, enjoys the sensory input of cosmic tiles while working on strength, balance and coordination.

"Core stability, strength and endurance are essential building blocks for how preschoolers function," says Alison. "These elements carry over to provide the distal mobility necessary for a variety of fine motor and academic tasks, enhance breath support for speech, and improve peer interactions."

읝 spotlight on product design

Enabling Devices' Chief Product Designer Bill Pedersen is a man who loves his job. "I've always been handy and used to drive and fix race-cars," says Bill. "I like figuring out how to make things work."

Since coming to Enabling Devices three years ago, Bill has created new products and redesigned existing products to make them easier to build and use. "Recently, we had a special request to create a foot switch for one child," Bill recalls. "It took some time, but eventually, we did it. After the child tried it out, we got an email back from the woman who requested it and she said it worked perfectly. Things like that remind you why we do what we do."

When Enabling Devices turns to outside manufacturers for help with our production needs, one of the businesses we choose to commission is Mid-Hudson Works in Poughkeepsie, NY. For the past 70 years, Mid-Hudson has provided cost effective solutions for mechanical and electrical assembly, light manufacturing and fabrication, and order fulfillment.

In addition to their high-quality work, Mid-Hudson Works is unique because of its mission. "We hire and train disabled veterans and others [with disabilities]" says executive director Robert Nellis. Nicholas L., a 21-year-old student at Bergen Community College in Paramus, N.J., isn't content to sit back and wait for others to fight city hall. Offering residential, medical, clinical, and special education programs to over 1,200 individuals annually, The Center nurtures the strengths and talents of everyone they serve. "From recreation to farming to the classroom, we integrate adapted devices so everyone can participate," says Jason Kean, Director of Innovation for TCFD.

"Certain products, like Enabling Devices' switch adapted scissors, (#9080, page 90) have been program staples for years. Clients use them to create mosaics, collages, and-most recently-a whimsical, faux stained-glass window in TCFD's production of 'Beauty and The Beast,'" Kean says. # special education school spotlight

At the John G. Leach School in New Castle, Delaware, students ages 3-21, with physical, cognitive and medical impairments, use Enabling Devices' products to "maximize their independence and participation in all school activities," says occupational therapist Kristin Chickadel. "One product that we have in every classroom, is the pouring cups. We use them for vocational training, baking, art and games..."

Kristin's colleague, OT Tom Winkler, works with students who use the pouring cups for an annual project. "They assemble chocolate chip cookie ingredients which they layer in mason jars," says Tom. "Some students can hold the cups, but for others, we utilize switches." After the mason jars are full, "we tie a bow around the jar, attach baking instructions and sell them as holiday gifts."

assistive living spotlight

After viewing a video about sensory rooms on Enabling Devices' website, Skip Wiggins, Director of Facilities at Rolling Green Village Retirement Community in Greenville, S.C., knew it would benefit residents in the community's Evergreen Place memory care program. So he called us.

"I took pictures and dimensions and they sent suggestions about layout and what to buy," he recalls. "The sensory room creates a soothing environment that gets residents engaged, helps them to relate to others, and provides sensory stimulation," says Skip. One product that's especially popular with residents is the room's Sensory LED Bubble Tubes (3392W). "They love watching the tube's plastic fish swimming around and seeing the bubbles change colors."
